Field Trip Form for the Conservators' Center

The Conservators' Center is a wildlife facility built for the comfort and care of our animal residents. The tour path has been created as a safe place for the public to travel through the site with a specially trained adventure tour guide to view our many animals. The tour path is clearly delineated by rope barriers. Anyone who crosses these barriers or who leaves their guide's supervision is placing themselves at risk and will be asked to leave without a refund. At the start of each tour, the guide will cover the brief list of rules all visitors are expected to obey. Conservators' Center staff will always put safety first. If a minor visitor is attending with a chaperoned group, all adults will be expected to help ensure that the rules are followed by the group.

All of the animal residents at the Conservators' Center are confined in enclosures that are built to meet or exceed the recommendations set forth by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). The Conservators' Center is licensed by the USDA and is routinely inspected to ensure both the welfare of its animal residents and to ensure the safety and well-being of visitors. In general, visitors to the Conservators' Center will not come into contact with any animals. The Center does house a few individual animals that have been specifically socialized for educational purposes. Any contact with an educational animal will be under the strict supervision of a trained animal handler.

By signing this form I agree to abide by the rules set by the Conservators' Center and to ensure that all minors or other people under my supervision also understand and abide by these rules at all times. If my child is attending without me being present, I have discussed the importance of following all safety rules at the Center with my child.
